

To whom it may concern;

I have worked as an IT Professional in many capacities. Most of my experience has been within a growing family business, where I was the head of the IT/IS department of a six-person company. This environment taught me to work in an all-hands-in environment, and get things done, no matter the skill level needed. Personal accountability has been critical in my work experience.

My work has been in the industries of medical billing, and later we made a business change over to financial technologies, including ATMs. This boils down to my work being implemented within highly regulated environments, where there is no room for error. I have created testing strategies and redundancies on small business budgets that roll out in an environment where only perfection is allowed.

What my resume does not show is my ability to figure out complicated technical questions and problems. I have served as a sounding board to an entrepreneur for 15 years, while he has invented, explored, considered, and developed a number of technical and complicated things.

My job with him, other than all things technical within regulated industries, was to provide good questions and considerations as he works through problems first in his head, and then on to subcontractors and developers.

In fact, while I was let go after he sold off the division that largely held my position, I still meet him for lunch and coffee to help him think through his latest concepts.

My personal interests include photography, flying, and travel.

I have an educated sense of humor and appreciate the darker side.

Thank you for reviewing my resume and qualifications. I look forward to discussing this opportunity with you further.

Thank you,

Erik L Haguewood
